So, you have yet to send out wedding invitations, but seem to have somehow already blown your budget. And now you look at invitations and realize that these are much more expensive than you thought. We don't blame you for considering making an effort to train carrier pigeons to deliver invitations to cut down on postage... Good thing you caught yourself before googling carrier pigeon charges (thus further distracting yourself by watching videos of carrying pigeons, etc) and instead to your friends at Brides. So, we we here with good news! It is possible to find some beautiful wedding invitations even on a limited budget. And one way to really cut back on costs is to look at printable invitation options. As in, you will find a design you like, the printer will give you a file, and you print it yourself. Voila! Although there may be more work at the end than if you rented a writing vein to take care of everything (design, printing, etc.), you save a lot of money by doing some of the back-end work yourself. Another good thing about printable invitations is that you can order a designer to do something completely customized, or they can just change pieces of an original design, or you can get them just rename in an existing invitation package - there are still a number of options for you, price-wise. Usually if you talk to the typewriter, they will be able to recommend a reliable printer that you can work with, and then it's as easy as sending the print company the digital file, chatting with them about what type of paper you want, and your timeline. Easy peasy! To help you get started, we rounded up some of our favorite budget-friendly printable wedding invitations from Etsy.
